USMC Sergeant Greg Caron

Ellington, Connecticut

Sgt. Greg Caron

Hero Story

On November 12, 2011, USMC Sgt. Greg Caron was on patrol in the Southern Marjah area of Afghanistan searching known Taliban compounds. Sgt. Caron was severely wounded when an IED exploded. He lost both legs, immediately, and received a critical wound to the brachial artery of his right arm.

Sgt. Caron was evacuated to Camp Dwyer where his situation turned for the worse. Once arriving at Dwyer, Sgt. Caron became unstable due to blood loss. He underwent emergency surgery to stabilize him, and to attempt to save his right arm.

Throughout the night, Caron received multiple units of blood, as the doctors did their best to stabilize him enough to enable him to be transported to a higher echelon of care at Bagram Airfield Hospital in Afghanistan. Once doctors felt he was stabilized, he was transported Bagram. While there, Sgt. Caron once again saw his condition worsen due to the extreme blood loss. Fortunately, doctors were once again able to stabilize him and he was moved to Germany.

Thankfully, the medical team was able to do enough to save the right arm, but Caron still does not have full function of the arm, and he can not grasp anything with his right hand. Sgt. Caron also lost the tip of his right middle finger, suffered shrapnel wounds to the right side of his body, and a broke his collarbone. He continues to recover at the Walter Reed National Military Medical Center in Bethesda, Maryland, where he is expected to be for at least six months.
